WHAT ARE SYNCFUSION PRODUCTS?

Syncfusion's products are not tools; they are software frameworks. One way to think about software frameworks is to simply see them as packaged source code. Packages are typically referred to as assemblies in the .NET world, though other packing mechanisms may be used for other platforms, such as the JavaScript platform.

We use the term "assemblies" to refer to any form or package that is used to consume our code. Once our assemblies are introduced into a product, they become an integral part of the product during both development time and deployment time. Thus, the product cannot usually be modified in any way without relying on Syncfusion.

WHAT IS A SUBSCRIPTION LICENSE?

Our licenses are pure subscriptions. This means that if you do not renew the subscription, it will terminate, and you will need to remove all Syncfusion products from all of your systems, software, applications, and developments.

You do not need to recall anything that was distributed outside of your organization. However, you cannot continue to lease, license, or provide maintenance to any applications that contain or depend on Syncfusion's products.

WHO NEEDS A LICENSE?

EVERYONE MUST HAVE A LICENSE. With our license model, every individual in the development stage who works with our software, has a copy of our software, or has access to our software frameworks, either directly or indirectly, must have a license. Licenses cannot be shared. Each developer must have their own license.

During the development of an application, Syncfusion requires anyone (1) coming in contact with a copy of the assemblies or (2) working as part of projects that use or otherwise depend on our assemblies in any fashion to be licensed. Syncfusion also requires anyone calling into or depending on any products using Syncfusion assemblies during development time to be licensed.

This would apply to any programmatic use, such as frameworks, web services, etc. It is also worth noting that most developers using our products during development will not be installing a copy of our products. They may instead be acquiring a copy from a source control or accessing an API-implemented program using our controls. They would need to be licensed regardless of the methods used to participate in the project.

Syncfusion also requires any testers using automated scripts to be licensed. Manual testers who do not have any development role do not need to be licensed.

The more developers you have, the less you pay per developer.

Get your product to market faster when the more you grow, the more you save.

HOW CAN LICENSES BE USED?

- Licenses must be assigned to specific individuals (not to generic email addresses such as itsupport@companyabc.com).
- Licenses can be transferred once they are assigned, however, they cannot be transferred for the purposes of avoiding purchasing proper amount of licenses.
- Syncfusion's license agreement prohibits frameworks, SDKs, and other development that would allow programmatical reuse.
